

One in three men have concerns about their sexual health (e.g. erectile dysfunction) after prostate cancer treatment. Many men are reluctant to get help for their sexual concerns, and when they do, often men do not continue with treatment.

To date there is little research to help us understand men's concerns about their sexual health after prostate cancer and how they prefer to address these concerns. Our online Men and Sexual Health – Prostate Cancer study will explore men's concerns about their sexual health, what contributes to their decisions to seek support, and from whom they prefer to receive this support. This is an international study which is supported by cancer control organisations, health professionals, and universities in Australia, New Zealand, Canada and Ireland.

The Men and Sexual Health - Prostate Cancer study is an online survey that will take approximately 30 to 40 minutes of your time. The survey asks about your sexual concerns, side effects after prostate cancer treatment, quality of life, decisions to use services, and the services that you prefer.

If you are aged over 18 years, have had treatment for Prostate Cancer and would like to share your experience and help other men affected by prostate cancer please type in the following URL into your web browser.

In addition to this, in the survey we will ask your permission to contact you again to complete another survey in 6 months and 12 months so that we can understand if you're sexual concerns and need for support services change over time.

Please note: If you are receiving this info from your local PCCN support group in Canada please note that this is not a Prostate Cancer Canada led study. Prostate Cancer Canada is not responsible for any personal or contact information you may provide to the study, nor the results of the study.
